A few reports suggest that it's the authentication protocol it uses that does not work for you. That's a bit disconcerting, but I'm not sure if anything else is broken. Phosphate binding by the Arabidopsis thaliana chromatin-bound zinc-finger protein, zinc-finger CCAAT-binding protein (ZF-CCAAT). We have examined the properties of Arabidopsis chromatin-bound ZF-CCAAT factor, the homologue of the yeast ZF-CCAAT protein. It is localized in the nucleus in a similar fashion as yeast ZF-CCAAT, binds to CCAAT DNA-element in vitro and is able to form heterodimers with yeast ZF-CCAAT. We found that Arabidopsis ZF-CCAAT factor does not bind to AT-rich DNA sequences like yeast ZF-CCAAT, but prefers at least partially GC-rich DNA sequences. The affinity of Arabidopsis ZF-CCAAT for DNA is similar to that of yeast ZF-CCAAT factor. However, the equilibrium and kinetic parameters of the binding process between ZF-CCAAT factor and DNA are much different from those of yeast ZF-CCAAT factor. We found that the amino acid sequence of the zinc-coordinating center of Arabidopsis ZF-CCAAT factor contains the cysteine and glutamic acid residues similar to yeast ZF-CCAAT factor. These data suggest that the yeast ZF-CCAAT factor and Arabidopsis ZF-CCAAT factor represent a new class of plant nuclear factors. last time, until the Seahawks actually did start running it out of a shotgun. This clearly shows that the magnetic oxide layer forms and develops around the non-magnetic portions of the roller. This may be due to small size particles that seem to be present in the roller that can act as a “lubricant” to reduce friction. We hope you enjoyed the answer to your question!
